NOTICE

Following released by Bureau of Agricultural Economics: Wind storm of September 14 caused material damage to Apple crop near Atlantic Coast from Eastern Shore Maryland and Delaware northward to Southern Maine. Most of summer and fall Apples had been picked so damage limited to late fall and winter varieties. Preliminary check indicates about 3,800,000 bushels of all varieties (13 percent of September 1 estimated production in states suffering damage) blown from trees. About 350,000 bushels were on Eastern Shore Maryland and Delaware, 700,000 in New Jersey, 450,000 Lower Hudson River Valley of New York and 2,300,000 in New England. About three-fourths of damage in New England occurred in Connecticut and Eastern Massachusetts. It is expected bulk of blown off fruit will be suitable for processing or fresh market channels. Damage to crops other than Apples limited. Peaches mostly harvested this area. Some vegetables damaged but benefits from rain expected to more than offset loss.
